THE STORY OF MEXICAN GLASS

Mexico has long been known as a land of the master craftsman. If the master craftsman is considered an artist, then glass is a wonderful canvas.

Glass blowing has long been a cherished form of art by Mexican artisans. The very first glass pieces produced in North America, were created in Puebla Mexico around 1535 by artisans brought from Spain.

Currently, Mexican glassware is crafted from Lead-Free, Recycled Glass. It is crushed and then shoveled into the furnace. When molten, the glass is worked by the master glass artist. Glass blowers use a technique that is over 500 years old, which involves placing a metal conduit up to their mouth and blowing it through a blob of molten glass, which has been heated up by a classic hearth especially made for glass blowers. As the glass maker blows, he starts to mold the glass blob by constantly turning it around with the conduit until it takes shape, however he may have to start all over if he blows too hard, as the glass is malleable and will break.

Today Mexico is very well known for hand blown drinking glasses, the most popular of them characterized by a blue band blown into the rim. All glasses are 100% Lead Free. Watching the artisans at their craft is mesmerizing, the technique is truly fascinating.
