We're brachiosaurs.
It means arm lizard - because our front legs are longer than our hind legs - a bit like giraffes.

I'm the elasmosaurus!
I'm not actually a dinosaur - I'm a reptile (but don't tell anyone!)
My name means the-plated lizard and I lived in the late Cretaceous period!
My nose was so long I could only fit it in the mouth of the water and used it as a snorkel and even though I was a reptile I could dig it all out!

Well hello! I'm aardonyx!

We're actually flying reptiles and not dinosaurs, and we had no teeth, big wings and long necks - perfect for catching fish and flying over the sea!

We are oviraptors!
Our name means egg-thief - people thought we were egg-eaters because we were first discovered near evidence of a pile of eggs. Turns out these were probably our own eggs!
We were long and thin dinosaurs and walked on two legs.

My name is acrocanthosaurus. Remember it!
My name means high-spined lizard - I was one of the largest dinosaurs and I was a predator. I was a long-necked dinosaur and I was a predator. I was a long-necked dinosaur and I was a predator.

fairytale & legends

eat sleep doodle

Can you write your own story about Robin Hood?

You can include the familiar setting and characters we know of, or you can make up your own new ones!

Robin Hood

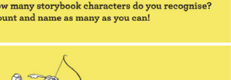

How many storybook characters do you recognise? Count and name as many as you can!

Storybook Characters

Do you recognise these two? They're brother and sister, Hansel and Gretel, two imagined characters created by German brothers Wilhelm and Jacob Grimm from the storybook 'Hansel and Gretel'. The story goes that the children are abandoned in a forest where, feeling tired and hungry, they discover a house made entirely of gingerbread and sweets. Lured by the treats, the children fall into the hands of a cannibalistic witch who lives inside the house. The witch intends to fatten the children before cooking and eating them, but cunning Gretel outwits her and pushes the witch in the oven, allowing her and children to escape. A rather scary story, the authors seem to match their own surname 'The Grimms'.

Think about your favourite fairytale and write your own version.

Have you seen this motor bike? It's known as a Combino Harvester, which is a very clever machine designed to harvest crops as efficiently as possible. It got its name because it combines three different ways of harvesting: grain, digging, and turning, meaning the grain is harvested, the soil is turned over, and the weeds are killed.
