

Artisanal Pottery & Hand-blown Glass Collection

Dense with Bougainville blossoms, palm trees and domed adobe rooftops, Tunis is a picturesque village that sits between Lake Qaroun and the desert dunes of the ancient Fayoum Oasis in Egypt.

In the 1980's, Swiss ceramist Evelyn Porret introduced the village children to handicrafts when she founded a pottery school. Using clay from the Nile banks of Aswan, its graduates have become Tunis's master potters who give the village and its pottery a unique aesthetic and style, adorning the pieces with primitive motifs from the flora and fauna of their surroundings; an identity that cannot be found anywhere else in the world.

For thousands of years, glass blowing has always been a part of Egypt's cultural heritage. The earliest recorded glass like material was found in the Dahshur region, which was used for mosaics & beads.

Today, Cairo's glassblowers have taken a more sustainable approach to the craft. This is through collecting used bottles from around the city, washing, sorting, breaking and melting them in a 1500 degrees celsius kiln and finally mouth blowing them into a variety of shapes to create imperfect forms with tiny bubbles that represent the material's once liquid state.
