WHAT ARE THE TYPES OF GASKETS?

A gasket is an object installed or glued on the surface of two different objects.

Car gaskets contain fluid that can prevent leaks and are useful in closing or attaching the two objects, so as to avoid leakage.

Leaks are very dangerous if left unchecked, therefore car gaskets are made of heat-resistant materials.

The gasket working system must work together with the connection, so the sealing ability must be studied very carefully.

PAPER GASKET

The cheapest one, used to seal oil and water. Can be filled with other materials such as wax.

VARNISHED PAPER GASKET

Very good when compared to ordinary paper. Should not be cracked or damaged in order to work properly.

CORK GASKET

Commonly used at low loads and on uneven surfaces. While it is resistant to oils & solvents, it is unfortunately not resistant to water. Thickness can differ.

CORK & RUBBER MIXED GASKET

Even better quality, as it is more flexible and stronger. Can be used for low to high loads.

RUBBER GASKET

One of the most versatile materials, it can be used as connection to drain cold water, very resistant to heat.

PTFE/TEFLON GASKET

This type of gasket is made of solid chemicals and is generally used at low temperatures. The resistance of this gasket is very strong against chemicals.

FABRIC-COATED GRAPHITE GASKET

Very flexible and good resistance to heat. It can be used for connections that allow hot water and steam to flow.

METAL MATERIAL GASKET

Typically used when non-metallic gaskets cannot support the performance to prevent leakage.

COPPER COATED ASBEC GASKET

This type of gasket has an asbestos layer consisting of two thin sheets of steel and copper. This material is very good to use at very high temperatures.

CAR GASKETS FUNCTION

Gaskets have a very important function in a car, here are 3 main functions:

CREATE SEAL & PREVENT LEAKS

Its main function is to act as an insulator between the cylinder head and cylinder block, to prevent oil leakage.

They also maintain density and prevent leakage during compression process. It helps create maximum compression possible in the combustion chamber.

WITHSTAND HIGH PRESSURE

Another function of the gasket is to hold the pressure, so it doesn't spread from the cylinder head to the block gap. Basically, a car engine must have an engine block and have a cylinder head made on top.

DISTRIBUTE HEAT

Car gaskets also function as heat distributors from the cylinder block to the head block. The gasket used is typically metal packing. In general, this function is closely related to preventing leakage.

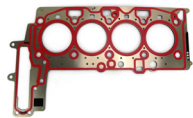

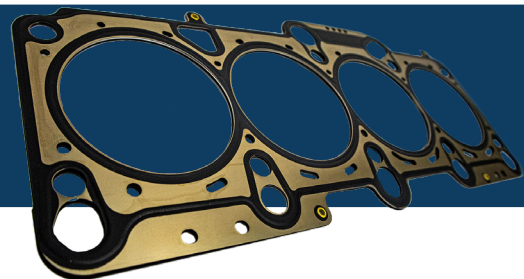

The use of gaskets has the aim of preventing leakage in the cooling water, compression, and oil combustion gases.

If a leak occurs, it will cause various gas leaks and other problems to the engine.
