

The Steinbach company from Marienberg in the Ore Mountains has been producing nutcrackers, smokers and miniature figures in the traditional way for over 200 years and stands for top quality from its own production in Germany. All figures are „Handmade in Germany“. Each piece of wood that we love to make in our factory is unique, because wood is a living resource, and every single piece has its own story, a story we continue to write. Each step, every detail and every brushstroke is carried out with care and dedication. The entire production process from creation through sampling to final production takes place in our factory in Marienberg in the Ore Mountains. Experience tradition - experience Steinbach.

The history of our traditional brand Steinbach

You can retrace the history of the Steinbach family back to the 13th Century. Originally they are from Austria and were known as a bustling family. They were traders, businessmen and judges. One of their lineal ancestors for example was Erwin von Steinbach, who took part in building the „Strassburger Münster,“ a famous church in France. Therefore, designing and creating new things already ran in the family. After 200 years of business, the Steinbachs moved to the Ore Mountains because of various wars and religious persecution.

Life in the Ore Mountains back then was characterized by many adversities and the residents were forced to adapt to those circumstances. Next to the mining industry, woodworking was one of the few possibilities to survive. For the Steinbach family, this necessity became a virtue. They managed to combine wooden art along with their creativity and from then on, they produced wooden figurines which were typical for the Ore Mountains – Nutcrackers and Smokers. Those little pieces of art found their way into people's living rooms. They were supposed to give their owner a moment of joy and were also believed to banish evil spirits.

The Steinbach family was now considered a huge part of the Ore Mountain „Männelmacher-Zunft“ and up until World War II Steinbach products enjoyed great popularity. In the turmoil of war the family was forced to adjust their production to the armament requirement and after the end of the Second World War they had to give up their factory in the Ore Mountains. Without any belongings, they moved to Hohenhameln near Hannover and started all over again. A misfortune, which turned into pure luck within a short period of time, led the Steinbachs to unexpected success. The head of the family, Christian Steinbach, quickly made contact with the U.S. Soldiers that were stationed in the Hannover area and wanted to bring an original German souvenir back to the United States after their service. What would be better than traditional German woodcraft from the Steinbachs? Ever since then they have produced mainly nutcrackers, which became more and more popular in America. Production and sales figures were steadily increasing and Steinbach became the synonym for Nutcrackers from Germany.

After the German re-unification in 1990, the Steinbachs moved back to the Ore Mountains and opened their factory in Marienberg. This period brought with it the most successful point in company history to this date. More than 200 employees produced nutcrackers in every possible shapes and sizes.

Christian Steinbach, who promoted sales in the U.S. himself for many months, became the „King of Nutcrackers“ and the business continued to flourish up until his sudden death in 2008. His missing drive and the financial crisis in America became a serious problem and in 2015, the company went bankrupt. They had to shut down the factory in Marienberg and prospects were not looking too good.

During that difficult time, the young entrepreneur Rico Paul from Dresden developed an interest in Steinbach. He learned about the bankruptcy and the shutdown of the factory from a U.S. newspaper. Right away he knew that the Steinbach brand, the company, and its beautiful nutcrackers needed to be salvaged. Already as a child, Mr. Paul marveled at his dad when he was carving figurines at his lathe. That was when he discovered his love for wooden art.

Together with employees, some old customers and suppliers, he created a concept to keep the tradition while simultaneously modernizing the structure. The first years now lie behind us and our main factory is back in Marienberg in the heart of the Ore Mountains. With our office and showroom in Atlanta, we are now also in the US for our American customers.

New marketing activities were designed, new sales channels acquired and old customers became friends.

The brand does have a new signature with a strong awareness for traditional values. The logo was modernised, packaging, brochures and catalogues got a new fancy design. New colors, shapes and fonts embellish the company's performance. Support for this digital makeover came from Mr. Paul's business partner Robert Liebich, who also carries the Ore Mountain gene. When he was a child, he loved to watch his dad assemble and hand carve the pyramid. Together, Mr. Paul and Mr. Liebich have a vision for Steinbach:

„We want to bring the German magic into people's homes all over the world.“

Meanwhile, the Steinbach Volkskunst GmbH became a family business again. Mr. Paul and Mr. Liebich's children are designing their first Nutcracker line and their dads both work at the production department every now and then to support them with their handicraft skills.

A new era has begun. With modern structures and traditional handicraft Steinbach will face a secure future.

Our Wizard seems to have lived in the forest for centuries. No one knows where he came from and only a few people had the luck to see him with their own eyes. It is told that he has a special bond with the spirits of the woods, spirits like the little unicorn which is glowing in the dark. Some people even say that he keeps the forest in balance and is the reason for this magical feeling you get, when you walk through a forest. With his big brown fur coat and shoes, as well as his green vest, he seems to blend in perfectly with nature. Maybe you can find out why the wizard stayed in the woods for so long.

Our love

for the perfect material

We only use selected European wood, delicately dried for at least two years.

In each of our nutcrackers there are different kinds of wood.

Every piece that we process in our factory is unique, because wood is a vivid material and each and every piece has its own history.

We will continue this history.

Steinbach Troll - the cozy ones

Our trolls radiate a sense of coziness and calm. Especially in the stressful Christmas season they can sweeten the day in any living room. The figures are between 11 and 14 inches tall and entirely handmade in Germany.

Many fantastic characters, also known from the wide range of large nutcrackers, or Chubbies, complement the small or large Steinbach collection perfectly.
