Take summer home with you

Boris Miller. Long Beach.
New York 2019

In summer, fabrics follow us wherever we go to meet the sun, the waves and the wind. We use them for shelter and even the smallest piece of fabric may spark our imagination and become an unforgettable sight when brought to life by light and wind. Released from the context of interiors, fabrics surprise us and awaken our creativity. We build, cover, decorate – just like little children. The same pieces of fabric may become different objects every time we use them. Wouldn't it be great to preserve this energy? DEKOMA's collection of summer fabrics neatly captured by photographer Boris Miller at the beaches of Long Beach NY and in the streets of New York is an attempt to reproduce this creative atmosphere, encouraging the search for new combinations of fabrics and their new applications. Transparent veils allow us to freely observe our surroundings without being seen. Light, airy, transparent fabrics make our interiors mysterious and fresh, bring more air and provide delicate colours. Let the fabrics drape softly, flow without any limits, let them rise and fall.

Light and shadow

Fabrics harmonise and resonate with light, just like with the air that surrounds them and makes them move. Subtle waves of smooth linen and cotton, natural colours and thick weaves gain a new look with every change of light. From dusk till dawn, every fabric changes incessantly, following the cycle of nature.

Laundry at the seaside

Fabrics are an inexhaustible mine of stylistic, scenography and design-related possibilities. The context in which they appear decides about their role and impact on our senses. Contrary to popular belief, even something as mundane as laundry at the seaside may be a source of inspiration. You just have to use your imagination and reach for new, very simple means. Faded linen, printed or melange cotton, blends with viscose – all of them share some common features: their quality is high, they can be put to almost universal use and they retain their properties irrespective of the circumstances. You can play and experiment with them as much as you like.

Modern times are not favourable to our senses. Paradoxically, we want to experience more sensual impressions. We not only want to see, but to feel and touch as well. Luckily, there is nothing more touchable than good quality fabrics. Delicate decatized linen, soft cotton, flexible and frim veils stimulate our senses.

Luxury found in simplicity

Simple solutions are the best. Being so unpretentious, summer is a great teacher of how to value the true appeal of life. The summer slow-life provides us with simple solutions for fabric use. Improvised awnings, tents, curtains, windbreaks and decorations – there are countless ideas you can bring to life in an instant!

Summer in the city

Summer in the city might be charming and exceedingly pleasant, providing you with a range of activities or just blissful idleness. It is associated with celebrating every moment, enjoying your meals outdoors. In the city, fabrics can be used to play with colour and dynamic patterns – they resemble bits of nature captured in the weaves.
