Butcher's blocks

Towards end grain wood...

Hall begins in the Jura forests where we choose the best hornbeams known for the density of their fibres, superior to oak.

Then it is the story of men and traditions. We have chosen a fabrication method which our firm has mastered for more than a century. We use wood called "end grain", this means that the sawing is perpendicular to the trunk fibres (as if it were cut in slices)

The hunks we obtain are patched together one by one so as to form the block.

Wood, a living material...

Wood has always been the favourite material for furniture manufacturers. The end grain wood is well-known for its sturdiness and its resistance to shocks and blade cuts.

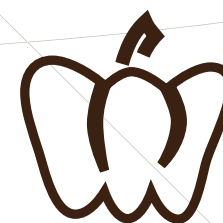

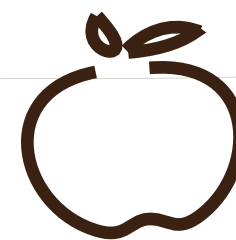

As cuts are made along the fibre, the block can neither crumble away nor break. We make our blocks according to the French norms (NF), thus your Chabret butcher's block will always remain smooth and healthy.

A know-how fitted to your needs...

At a time when cooking has become an art, the butcher's block is now as essential for individuals as for professionals.

Thanks to their authenticity as well as their aesthetics, our end grain wood butcher's blocks perfectly fit in today's kitchens.

Since 1885, Chabret has developed a genuine know-how in the made-to-measure fabrication of furniture and butcher's blocks in end grain wood.
